Economic Drivers of Migration & Climate Change in LDCs

By Helene Bie Lilleør, Katleen van den Broeck

University Press of Southern Denmark. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Economic Drivers of Migration & Climate Change in LDCs, Helene Bie Lilleør, Katleen van den Broeck, Environmental migration is a topic which has given rise to widespread debate and gloomy predictions about the state of the world in 2050, but where rigorous research and empirical evidence are unfortunately in short supply. In this paper, we review the existing research on and empirical evidence of how climate change and climate variability in Less Developed Countries (LDCs) affects two main drivers of migration identified by migration models in the economic literature, namely income level differentials between origin and destination areas and income variability in origin areas, and how they in turn affect migration. We find that there are serious gaps in both the economic and the environmental literature that render it impossible to make sound and robust predictions of how climate change and increased climate variability will affect the economic migration drivers, and of how these in turn may change existing migration patterns. There are some empirical indications that income differentials may increase due to lower income levels in the origin areas of LDCs, but virtually no evidence exists of the...

Reviews

Here is the finest publication we have read right up until now. It is actually written in easy words instead of difficult to understand. It's been written in a remarkably easy way in fact it is only right after I finished reading this book in which basically changed me, modify the way I really believe.
