Extrait: . article on the Commercial Possibilities of the Panama Canal, by Worthington C. Ford, chief of the Bureau of Statistics under President Cleveland, in Harper s Magazine foMay, 1898, will be able to see how strong th case is against that measure as a financial proposition. I respectfully request the privilege of your columns for a few words on this subject. If any student of financial propositions will seriously consider these five questions, he will be likely to conclude that the $250,000,000 which the United states is to spend in digging the canal, before it can receive the slightest return, will be very largely squandered. 1. From whose pockets will come the $250,000,000 which must be spent before the canal can be opened, and who shoulders all the risk of its being a financial failure? 2. What prospect of financial return from profitable financial traffic is held out by the Commission? 3. What nation s shipping and what nations export trade will be most benefited by this new route? 4. Will the profit, whatever it be, go back into the same pockets from which the $250, 000,000 were taken? 5. What harmful effects upon the internal trade of the United States, and what serious blow at the principle of the protective tariff will the canal deal? After a careful consideration of these questions, coupled with a study of the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, I am firmly convinced that...
