Jackson: Disclosing the Depths of Mormon Villany Practiced in Nauvoo The following narrative of my experience in Nauvoo, is submitted to the public, that it may call attention to the character of the iniquities practiced in that city, in the name of Religion. I am aware that such is the nature of the disclosures made in the following pages - such the blackness of the record - that it will be difficult to induce men to believe that such depravity could possibly exist. From what follows, however, it will be perceived that my motives in going to Nauvoo were to gain the confidence of the Prophet, that I might discover and disclose to the world his real designs and the nature of his operations. To do this, I was obliged to practice dissimulation, and to seem to be a fit tool for him to work with. Some may say that such conduct on my part was not excusable; but let such bethink themselves that the secret designs and workings of this Heaven-daring wretch, could never have been made public only by such means as I adopted, and therefore the end justified the means. Many are the instances on record, in which bands of robbers and counterfeiters have so organized themselves as to be enabled to baffle the closest scrutiny of the law; and in such instances it has been a common practice, especially in Europe, to employ men to become seeming accomplices, that they might thus be enabled to disclose the information necessary for a conviction. This was my object; and the inducement by which I was prompted...
