Not illustrated. 1837 Excerpt: .resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. Without referring to any similar passage, this is sufficient to teach the Christian what conduct he should pursue towards those who are placed in authority. It is sufficient to shew him that he should not be a turbulent subject, a reviler and declaimer against them. Feelings and conduct of this kind are unhappily too congenial with our fallen nature, and many self-willed persons have always been found ready to speak evil of all constituted authorities, merely because they are constituted. These are ever ready for violence and tumult; the bitterness of their spirit appears in their language, which is such as often to excite others to deeds of violence and blood. Depart, I pray you, from the tents of such wicked men, lest imbibing their spirit, and excited by their harangues, you become partakers of their evil deeds, and perish with them in their sins. The Christian spirit is pure and peaceable. It is too much occupied with the things of heaven, to embroil itself in the politics of earth. Such will he ever the spirit of a true Christian, even if he conscientiously dissent from the church establishment, or prefer a different form or administration of civil government. May God grant unto us quietness and peace. May he appear for us in every extremity, and rebuke the presumption and violence of designing and evil-disposed men. May he pour...
